DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

1. Claims 1-2, 4, 6-7, 9, 11-13 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Cistulli ("Cistulli"; World Document WO 98/20665) in view of Caccuro ("Caccuro"; U.S. Patent number 5,440,615).

Regarding claim 1, with reference to figure 1 and its description, Cistulli discloses a mobile terminal which is bearable by a user and which is capable of performing both of sending and receiving operations (inherent in a cellular telephone), comprising:

a storage unit which registers first language information which identifies a first language used by the user in the mobile terminal (figure 1, block 60, 65, 70, see abstract, pages 1-2);

a language translation unit which translates outgoing information from the first language into the second language and/or incoming information from the second language into the first language (figure 1, block 60, 65, 70, see abstract, pages 1-2); and an output unit which outputs the translated information (figure 1, LCD 30).

Art Unit: 2685

However, Cistulli does not disclose a determining unit which determines second language information which identifies a second language, on the basis of language information included in a calling telephone number entered by the user of the mobile terminal or in a reception telephone number received by the mobile terminal.

In an analogous art, Caccuro teaches a language selection for voice messaging system. With reference to figures 4-7 and their detailed descriptions, Caccuro further teaches a determining unit which determines second language information which identifies a second language, on the basis of language information included in a calling telephone number (these are the originating Country Code) entered by the user (column 1 line 51 to column 2 line 11).

Therefore, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art, at the time the invention was made to use, within the mobile terminal of Cistulli, the determining of the different languages based on the caller line identification, as taught by Caccuro, so that a correct language is identified in order to have a meaningful communication.

Regarding claim 2, Caccuro further teaches that the language information includes a country code of the telephone number (column 1 lines 51-66).

Regarding claims 4, 9, Caccuro further teaches the information receiving unit which receives the language information from the originator's terminal, wherein the determining unit uses the received language information as the language information to determine the second language (column 2 lines 1-10).

Regarding claim 6, Cistulli further teaches that output unit comprises at least one of a display unit to display characters or images (page 3, figure 1).

Regarding claims 7, 11-13, these claims merely reflect the method, medium, computer data, and programming code for performing the necessary functions as oppose to the apparatus of claim 1 and are therefore rejected for the same reasons.

Allowable Subject Matter

2. Claims 3, 5, 8, 10 are objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.

Regarding claims 3, 8 the prior art provided numerous examples of language translation devices in the radiotelephone communications, but failed to disclose or fairly suggest the specific combination of structural and functional limitations set forth in claims 3, 8, specifically, the language information sending unit which sends the language information to a calling terminal if no language information is included in the calling telephone number.

Regarding claims 5, 10, the prior art also fails to show a radio communicating unit which communicates via a radio network, wherein the determining unit determines the second language by using the language information included in signals which are radiated from a base station if there are no language information in the calling telephone number or the reception telephone number.
